An Alternative to Rechargeable Flashlights

SureFire, LLC has announced the newest addition to its law enforcement product line – the G3™ LED Holster Kit. Built around SureFire's popular G3 LED flashlight, the Kit features an ergonomic holster designed to minimize flashlight deployment time using a new "cross draw" technique which allows the light to be drawn and paired with a handgun in a quicker, more efficient motion. The holster also houses three spare batteries (included), supplying the G3 LED with enough power to generate 18 hours of total useful runtime in the field – substantially more runtime than current rechargeable flashlights.

Constructed of a durable polymer, the reversible G3 LED Holster can easily be positioned anywhere on a duty belt, accommodating both right- and left-handed officers. The flashlight sits in the holster bezel down and is canted at an angle to allow for a quicker draw in high stress situations where every moment counts.

system. This capability allows agencies to break out of the four or six "lane" limitation on other law enforcement simulators and utilize the system to accommodate the way they actually train and operate, instead of modifying the training to fit within the limitations of the system.

This innovation allows agencies to outfit trainees with up to 16 individually identifiable laser fitted force option devices. The system will identify each device by a unique code, recording what device was deployed by whom; when and how it was used; and the fall of fire and reaction time for each. This information is then replayed immediately to the trainee or team and can be stored for later review, summarized in the report generator, or captured externally to agency training records.
